

Happiness Is A Book That Changes Your Life

"The world is full of wonderful things you haven't seen yet. Don't ever give up on the chance of seeing them." JK Rowling was the author that did just that. She filled the minds of young readers with a world of imagination and adventure. She changed the world by giving millions of young children a story and another world for them to see.

When I was in second grade, my mother placed a book in my hands. That was the beginning of my journey into a world where elves and giants are real, and horses can fly. As I read, I got more and more lost in the book. Although I got lost, the more I found myself. Before reading Harry Potter, I never believed in magic. After reading the last page of the book, I still didn't think magic was real, but I found a different kind of magic. That was the magic that comes out of reading a good book. The magic that allows you to be transported into another world, and when you come back, you are a different person. As I read, I fell in love with people who I could never be, and adventures that I would never have. Even though I would never embark on the same journey that Harry did, Jk Rowling, an inspiring citizen, taught children to write their own stories. A book can also be another light. It can illuminate the dark and expand our eyes that we use to see the universe. A book can be an escape. A way out of the world that we live in.

As I started to read more, I started a new adventure every time I opened a new book. Whenever I look at book's cover, I know that it's a new journey that is about to begin. Jk Rowling has taught me to write my own stories. A new adventure that was unscripted and unplanned. I realized that with just a pen and a piece of paper, I could create a whole other world. And so, let the adventure begin.
