7th Grade, Springman

As I fly over the vast town of Glenview, I look around at what needs to be fixed. It is a calm spring day, and people are outside, running, playing and talking. But something in the corner of the Springman Middle School playground does not look quite right. I swoop down, and land on the fence beside the chaos. A kid is being bullied and the bully is not stopping. The other kids are not helping, and the teacher is oblivious to the problem. I jump into the scene and pull the bully away, telling the kids that bullying is not okay. This situation happens so often, and it is easy to stop. Respect is my super power, and my goal is to make the whole world decide to be kind.

Respect is essential to having good character, and essential to being a good person. I see some teenagers trying to take a ball from a group of kids. A kid fell and no one helps him. These careless people are always there, and they need to realize that what they are doing is wrong. When I fly down to them, they immediately stop when they see someone is watching. I tell them that good character is what you do when no one is watching.

Many people are too afraid to stand up for a friend, someone they see, and even sometimes themselves. I fly around Glenview at the speed of light, convincing people to be an upstander and choose kind. Me, along with many others are inspired by the quote from Wonder, "When given the choice between being right or being kind, choose kind." Everyone needs to choose kind, and the world will be a much happier place. People will set the example for others by being an upstander and respecting each others' differences, and the dream of the world being filled with respect will come true, starting with you.
