

Do you have someone in your life that really stands out to you? Well, for me it's my grandpa. His name is 何文超. I look up to him because he is caring, and responsible. He really stands out to me and would always be there for me.

He's caring because he always cares about his whole family. Every time I visited him in China, he would always be happy and would edit a lot of my photos to make them better. When I was little, I lived with him for four months. My grandpa taught me how to walk. And when I danced, he would always be cheering on. Even though my grandpa was poor in his childhood life, he went to a great college. After he got out, he was really nice and found jobs for several of his siblings.

He's responsible because when my grandma was sick, he would always be right next to her to make her feel good. And he would always be the one responsible for her. For example, he would brush her teeth, change her clothes, and feed her food. When his family members were sick, he would take them to the hospital and would stay there with them, even if it was a long time. He worked really hard after college. Then, he led a team to build a new city. And he wrote a book about this experience.

My grandpa is someone I really admire and someone really important in my life. He is both caring and responsible. I really want to be like him someday.
